

Our Tenth Anniversary Year Concludes

Chris Matthew Sciabarra

With this issue, The Journal of Ayn Rand Studies concludes its tenth year of publication. We're a little late this time—owing partially to the fact that the journal's address has changed three times over the last year: from Port Townsend, Washington to Reno, Nevada, and finally, Brooklyn, New York. We hope that the contents herein are well worth the wait.

This issue—Volume 10, Number 2—is our symposium on Friedrich Nietzsche and Ayn Rand.

I'd like to express my deep appreciation to long-time Advisory Board member, Lester Hunt, who has co-edited this symposium with me. I trust that readers will enjoy the intellectual give-and-take on the pages that follow.

Thanks again to all of our readers and supporters who have made The Journal of Ayn Rand Studies possible.
